Financial Updates with Potential Impacts on the PA Charter School Community

Felt most painfully this school year in staff turnover and the challenge of filling vacancies, charter schools are not immune to broader issues affecting the economy. From a financial perspective, inflation is causing challenges for schools now - and possibly even more so in next year's budgets.

There is no shortage of media coverage of the inflation dynamic, but we want to encourage school leaders and boards to prepare - that is: prepare, not panic - for impacts of inflation on 22-23 budget planning, as well as for current-year symptoms of inflation's impact on costs and financial health.

For the current year, schools are seeing - or might expect to see - direct increases in certain cost categories, including: external services for which prices are not contractually fixed; various facility costs, such as utilities or construction (materials and labor); technology hardware; classroom and administrative supplies; rates for substitute teachers or services. However, and thankfully, a school's largest expenditures - typically salaries, benefits and lease/mortgage costs - were effectively locked in by the nature of agreements or contracts and thus have not jumped during the year. We cannot expect that dynamic to hold at the turn of the next fiscal year.

As we prepare for the 22-23 school year budget, we should monitor staffing conditions locally to make sure our salary increase assumptions ( $2-3 \%$ average raises historically) are realistic to maintain staff. While it is too early to know any change in health benefit costs for next year, we should assume - due to a rebound in utilization rates that fell during 2020 due to COVID restrictions - increases here as well. Even if higher costs in other categories prove temporary or level out, the nature of personnel costs as the largest single category in your school's budget means we must be prepared to think creatively or to consider trade-offs to meet these financial challenges.

We are fortunate to have federal funding (ESSER 2, ARP ESSER) to help offset some or all of these costs in 22-23, but we must also prepare for how to operate the school at a higher cost even beyond the timeline when federal funds may be reduced to earlier levels. We look forward to working with you in the coming months to navigate these issues.
