Financial Updates with Potential Impacts on the PA Charter School Community

- School Choice Week highlighted the vital role public charter schools in Pennsylvania and beyond:

Study suggests that achievement gaps could narrow significantly if more students had the option to attend charter schools

FORDHAM

As our charter school community celebrates Black History Month, a national survey shows that Black parents continue to support public charter schools and other forms of educational choice.

And this compelling OpEd from the CEO of the Pennsylvania Coalition of Public Charter Schools demands that any education reform should empower students and families, not systems.

- Governor Wolf's final Budget address will likely paint charter school payments in a negative light, but his political power to cut funding is at a low-point. As is the case annually, several anti-charter groups have timed the release of their reports or initiatives to coincide with the February timing of the Governor's annual Budget address. An increasing trend among anti-charter groups is to claim that charter schools are responsible for higher property taxes for all Pennsylvanians. Although there are no proposed anti-charter bills in the PA House or Senate that appear to have momentum in the current environment dominated by pandemic-related issues and the 2022 Gubernatorial race, we urge all members of the charter community to continue to educate internal and external stakeholders on the great benefits of and need for equitably-funded, high-quality public charter school options for Pennsylvania students and families - which were created through legislation but can also be harmed by legislation as well.
- Federally-funded PA Charter Schools Program (CSP) Grant is available to new or expanding brick-and-mortar charter schools, with this year's application being opened this week. The PA Coalition for Public Charter Schools (PAPCS) will act as a pass-through entity for competitive funds, which will be awarded to high-quality sub-grantees who already have approval from their local authorizers to create, expand or replicate a brick-and-mortar charter school in Pennsylvania's most underserved areas. If your school is not new or expanding now, keep in mind the Grant's existence for future possibilities. More details on the Grant, eligibility, application, etc can be found here.
